

Not That Basic: Exposing The System

A documentary about how Basic Income can address exploitation, inequality and the environmental crisis

Over the past few years Aaldrik Bakker and Chiel Epskamp, both filmmakers from The Happiness Economy Foundation in Amsterdam, dedicated their lives laying the groundwork for a high-profile big picture documentary about basic income, Not That Basic.

To inspire current and next generations we are telling an untold hopeful story about how UBI exposes the current economic system and how to make it more sustainable.

Since it's an independent production they need your help to make this happen. Therefore, they are setting up a crowdfund campaign to fund it.

“We believe that basic income doesn't only contribute to social security, but it also helps people to be able to make more sustainable choices,” says Chiel Epskamp, one of the filmmakers behind “Not That Basic.” “It offers people the freedom to choose the type of work they truly want to do while simultaneously reducing pressure on the climate crisis and combating poverty,” says Aaldrik Bakker, the initiator and filmmaker of the project.

Right now we're live at Kickstarter. Watch their incredible trailer and read more about their film, mission and vision on their Kickstarter Page.

You can donate directly to their website to support them with their dream if you don't have a debit/credit card.

Big thanks!

Aaldrik Bakker and Chiel Epskamp
Amsterdam, The Netherlands
notthatbasicfilm.com